SRB changes affect airmen

The Air Force recently revised re-enlistment bonuses with changes that will affect more than 100 career fields.

The changes will affect certain career fields more than others.

"The revision to the selective re-enlistment bonus program includes additions of zones in two career fields that previously did not have a bonus. In addition, 10 career fields that previously had some type of bonus were deleted from the revised list," according to the official Air Force Web site.

The changes are the result of careful review of the needs and retention rates of each career field. "(Selective re-enlistment bonuses) are reviewed semi-annually by a review board which includes each enlisted specialty. During this com-

Team D-M Mission Spotlight

The 355th Component Maintenance Squadron performs intermediate-level maintenance to include repair and testing of propulsion units. Members of CMS troubleshoot and repair avionics, navigation, computer, electronic warfare and photographic equipment. The squadron calibrates test, measurement and diagnostic equipment, and completes maintenance on aircraft accessory systems to include fuels, egress, hydraulics and electrics. The 355th CMS supports seven flying squadrons comprised of A/OA-10, EC-130 H, HC-130P and HH-60E combat-ready aircraft.

455th Expeditionary Operations Group

I experienced engagement from the enemy for the first time July 12. I had recently arrived at Bagram Air Field, Afghanistan, just prior to a rocket attack on the base.

Unlike everyone else, I had not yet fallen into the rhythm of everyday life in a deployed location. Although they give you one briefing after another about how we are operating in a combat zone and we need to always be on alert, it didn't really sink in until I heard the explosion of an incoming rocket targeting our lives and what America stands for.

It was about 9 p.m. local and I was socializing in the common area when suddenly a loud boom rocked us and I saw a flash about 100 yards away toward the flightline area.

Nothing can describe what I felt when the attack siren started wailing and everyone started running for bunkers and weapons. I could tell who had been well trained and who were taken by surprise and didn't know what to do. Some were panicking, but most were going off of memory from the training the Air Force had given them. This is what I had trained for in all those operational readiness exercises, and I was grateful for all the hours spent "playing like we fight."

If I could give just one piece of advice to those going through the rigorous labor of OREs back home, it would be this: Pay attention to what they're teaching you in the exercises and practice it. Run what-if scenarios over in your mind repeatedly.

Training the Air Force is offering you now is the biggest paycheck you'll ever receive, because it's preserving your life, a life that is needed by your spouse, your children, your family and everyone else who loves you. But even more importantly, the training is preserving the life of an entire free nation. What you do keeps our aircraft in the air and flying in free air space without fear.

I think our command chief here, Chief Master Sgt. Les McPeak, 455th Air Expeditionary Wing, has worded it perfectly for us. During a newcomers briefing he showed us six photographs. One was of his wife and the rest were images of each of his five children.

"Why am I sharing my family with you?" he asked. "Because there are people out there who want to kill them. And that is why I'm in the Air Force and serving here."

I realize now after experiencing the reality of someone who wants us dead, that our training enables us to resist that evil and keep America free. The OREs are not just for you, but also for your family and your free nation under God.

prehensive process, the board reviews each enlisted specialty and inputs from Air Force career field managers and adjusts future payments based on availability of funding and retention patterns across the Air Force," said Senior Master Sgt. Lionel McFarlane, 355th Wing Career Assistance advisor.

To understand the importance of these changes, one must first understand the program itself, according to McFarlane.

"The SRB program is primarily a key monetary incentive to encourage re-enlistment of experienced and qualified enlisted personnel in certain skills necessary to sustain the career force objectives in those skills. Basically, the intent is to keep the right people in the right jobs that we need to accomplish our mission. SRB awards (are calculated) using one month's base pay, (multiplied by the number of) years the member is re-enlisting for, (multiplied by) the SRB multiple."

McFarlane said many people believe the SRB is a new incentive, but that is not the case. "Legislative authority for a re-enlistment bonus has existed continuously since shortly after the Revolutionary War under a number of different names, beginning with a 'bounty for re-enlistment,' around $16."

The bounty for re-enlistment has since evolved through various forms into today's SRB program.

Can changes to the SRB program be expected in the future? "You bet. Based on history, this incentive has a proven track record of retaining quality people while giving us the flexibility to change," emphasized McFarlane.

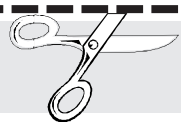

The process of providing re-enlistment bonuses, and which specialties receive those bonuses, has changed with the times and will continue to change to meet the needs of the Air Force and its members.

A new list of bonuses is at <http://www.afpc.randolph.af.mil/enlskills/Reenlistments.htm>.

World, the need for child care has increased.

“The Finley Child Development Center provides for many military children, but it can’t care for them all or accommodate all parents’ unique schedules,” said Ray.

To counteract the lack of available service, the FCC is doing what it can to remind people of the benefits of getting involved in the program.

“A parent can not only stay home with their own children, but they can also earn extra income at the same time,” said Ray. “They can also set their own hours, caring for children on an hourly, part-day, full-day or extended basis.”

In addition, costs of getting started are little to none. The government provides everything needed for the program.

“When I first got started as a child care provider, I had no start-up cost,” said Tangela Davis, wife of Desmond Davis, 612th Air Communications Squadron. “All I had to do was make sure my renter’s and car insurance covered me having the children in my home or in my car.”

A child care provider at D-M for the past seven years, Davis stated she was able to get all her start-up equipment on base. "They have everything from playdough on down," she said.

Through the Free Lending Program, the FCC offers a range of child development and safety items including books, games, toys, first-aid kit covers and more.

“People need to remember that, while this is a very rewarding career, it is also a hard job,” said Davis. “People can’t just jump into it. They need to really love kids and want to help make a difference in their lives.”

To help prepare people for the rewards and challenges of being a child care provider, there are mandatory training sessions. Training for people who live on-base takes about 35 hours over a period of five days.

While training requirements are different for people who live off-base, they can still become providers.

“Those who live off-base need to get licensed by the state of Arizona before going through the on-base training,” said Ray. “The state training takes about three days and includes fingerprinting.” Both the on- and off-base training is free.

“I think anyone who is thinking about getting started should go for it,” said Davis. “I have truly enjoyed my experiences, especially being able to take care of my own children while helping other people raise theirs.”

Those interested in supporting the Air Force mission by caring for children of military and civilian personnel should call 228-2201.

Your Guardians of Freedom distribute 200,000 parent pins

By Master Sgt. Scott Elliott
Air Force Print News

Your Guardians of Freedom, the Air Force's grass-roots outreach information and recognition program, has touched the lives of more than 200,000 parents of airmen, a Pentagon official announced.

The program began in 2002 as a way for Air Force leaders to personally recognize the employers of reservists and guardsmen who were called to active duty to support operations Noble Eagle and Enduring Freedom. Employers who were nominated by their airmen employees received lapel pins emblazoned with the Air Force logo and the letter "E," and a personal letter signed by the Air Force's senior leaders.

The recognition program expanded in May to include parents. Nominated parents received a letter and lapel pin with the letter "P." All active-duty, Air National Guard and Reserve airmen may participate in the program, officials said.

About 110,000 of the nearly 590,000 uniformed airmen have nominated their parents for recognition, according to Brig. Gen. Ed Tonini, program director.

"That's a huge number," he said. "We've gotten an exceptional reaction."

The general said the program was so well received in its first few days that technical overload initially hampered the project.

"There was such an onslaught of people signing up, so we had some problems," he said. "We jammed the Web site to where it was virtually impossible to get in."

The program also endured a short-lived identity problem, where some airmen mistakenly thought the program was a fraud because of its dot-com Web address.

"We are 'non-standard' in many ways," Tonini said. "The standard Web sites people in the military are used to dealing with for official business is dot-mil, and we're dot-com. A lot of people thought this was a hoax, so we had to throw water on that fire quickly. This program has both the endorsement and full support of the secretary and chief of staff."

Tonini brought a network administrator, Senior Master Sgt. Jack Gruber from the California ANG, to his team to work out the technical issues, and it has been smoother sailing ever since, he said. Gruber's responsibilities can be really daunting; the site was, for a time, one of the 300 busiest Web sites in the world.

"The site has had more than 29 million hits," Tonini said. "That's pretty staggering. We're working with new technology — we're one of the first Air Force sites to use 'dot-net,' which is an Internet operating system that is very leading-edge."

A team of six people works the program, managing the technology and "customer service" liaison between the airmen who request pins and the parents who receive them — as well as the thousands of letters and pins sent to employers.

The program will soon inform family members, employers and community leaders during times of military deployment, Tonini said.

"The overall Your Guardian of Freedom program will be tied to air and space expeditionary force deployment schedules," he said.

"When people are scheduled to deploy, we will press very hard to make sure they have the communications and outreach support they need in order to be successful.

"In its broadest terms, it's an outreach program," Tonini said.

The work is important because without support from the home front, deployed airmen face a domino effect of issues that may lead to those airmen separating from the service, Tonini said.

"The program is working and it does what we were looking for it to do," Tonini said. "We know there are parents out there who proudly wear the pin to church, the store or meetings, and every other time they have an opportunity to brag on their son or daughter. That represents a swelling support for the work of the Air Force all over the world."

Airmen may request up to two parent pins and letters to be sent to either their parents or people they view as parental figures, Tonini said. To participate in the program, visit www.yourguardiansoffreedom.com.

"Everyone has someone they want to recognize," he said. "The person who gets the pin will feel an amazing attachment to the work you do."

Honoring Veterans about more than respect

By 1st Lt. Ryan Taylor

41st Electronic Combat Squadron

A trip to the base exchange a couple of months ago turned out to be one the proudest moments of my life. I walked in just planning on picking up a couple of uniform items, but walked out with much more than I ever expected.

As I walked toward the back of the store I noticed an elderly gentleman in a wheelchair wearing an "Order of the Purple Heart"

cap. His son was pushing him around and talking to him. As I walked by I heard the son telling the man in the wheelchair that they had second lieutenant rank in stock as well as captain's rank, but they did not have any first lieutenant silver bars there. As I continued to shop they continued to look for the rank, but shortly they gave up and walked to a different part of the store.

As I finished picking up what I needed, I came to the conclusion that there was no way I could let a decorated veteran leave the store without his rank. I turned to look for them. It took me a little while to find them, but luckily a couple of minutes later I ran into them again.

I felt a little nervous walking up to them, but I did anyways, and I am very glad that I did. I asked if they were able to find a silver bar, and they told me they were unable to. I asked if he would like mine, I had one on my cap. He seemed a little worried to take mine, but I insisted, and told him that I would be honored if he would wear it.

All I knew about him at that point was that he was awarded a Purple Heart, but I was to learn much more about him. I took the bar off my cap and handed it to the man's son. The older man then asked for the bar to be put on his "Order of the Purple Heart" cover, and the man's son asked me to put it on as he did not know how to do it himself. I realized that he would wear my rank on his hat and my heart swelled with pride.

As I put the bar on he began to tell me about himself. He was in the infantry and fought in the European theatre during World War II. The veteran told me he was captured and spent some time in a German Prisoner of War camp. He received a battlefield commission, and his regimental commander gave him his gold bar after a particularly fierce battle near Nancy in France. The more I heard the prouder I became. As I handed the hat back and he put it on, he seemed close to tears, and I know I was. He took the time to memorize my name so that he would always know who had given him his bar. He thanked me many times for my insignia, and I told him it was the least I could do for all he had done in the past. We then headed our separate ways.

I didn't expect to see or hear from him again, but about a month later I received a phone call in my office. It was someone calling from the officer's club requesting I come down and visit saying, "Someone that you did a good deed for would like to thank you."

Well, it's not every day you are requested to go to the O' Club, and I wasn't about to turn down an invitation! As I drove I kept trying to figure out who it was. Who felt I had done a good deed? The moment I walked in the door I saw that same man in the wheelchair, and I immediately walked up and said, "Hi."

This time his daughter and her husband were there and they wanted to thank me for what I had done. We sat down and talked again, and I was amazed by how big a deal my little offering was. The veteran had written to his hometown newspaper about how a lieutenant gave him the rank off his hat and that the article was put on the front page.

He told me more of his war stories, he had received four Purple Hearts, the last from trying to pick up and throw a German grenade away from him and his men. Unfortunately the grenade exploded in his hand blowing his index finger off, and leaving his middle finger useless. It was then that he was captured and taken to a POW camp in Germany.

The more I learned the more I was impressed with him and what he had done, and the happier I became that I took the time to do the right thing. As we left lunch, his daughter asked for my address so they could send the newspaper article written about me. The article arrived, along with a thank you card, and an old award citation. In the card, his daughter thanked me again for what I had done.

She told me that up until the day I saw him in the BX, he had not left his nursing home for four years, other than for trips to the Veterans Administration hospital. Now he tries to get out as much as he can and his friends and family will let him. Also included in the card was Ira W. Austin's citation for the Silver Star for bravery...

I will always remember 1st Lt. Ira W. Austin, U.S. Army (retired) and will always appreciate everything he and his generation have done for this country.

I am proud to serve in the armed forces, even having the chance to fly combat sorties during Operation Iraqi Freedom.

We cannot, however, forget the sacrifices that those before us have made. Lieutenant Ira Austin, thank you for all you have done and thank you to all those who fought and died in all our battles to keep this country free.

Thank you for all of your wonderful remembrances of my recent birthday. Your cards, calls, and thoughts made my birthday extra special.

During in-flight refueling, the HC-130 load master has the best view in the house. A 129th Rescue Squadron HH-60 Blackhawk helicopter from Moffett Field, Calif., moves in for refueling from a Davis-Monthan 79th Rescue Squadron HC-130 July 8 during rescue operations over the Pacific Ocean.

Tech. Sgt. B. Coors-Davidson

"These Things We Do That Others May Live"

By Tech. Sgt. B. Coors-Davidson
355th Wing Public Affairs

"'These Things We Do That Others May Live' is not a motto strictly reserved for Air Force Pararescue members," said 2nd Lt. Jonathan Harmon, 48th Rescue Squadron combat rescue officer. "It's a motto that applies to all of us who support the combat search and rescue mission. Whether serving on a flight crew, in maintenance, support, or on a Pararescue team, every life saved is the direct result of the selfless dedication of many people."

One recent example of that dedication was the rescue of a merchant mariner who became critically ill while serving aboard the MV Cape Horn, a Military Sealift Command container ship, that was more than 650 nautical miles from the nearest medical care.

In a joint effort between the 129th Rescue Squadron based at Moffett Field, Calif., and Davis-Monthan Air Force Base's 79th and 48th Rescue Squadrons and 79th Aircraft Maintenance Unit, the mariner received desperately needed medical care within hours.

"Each unit only has a few pieces of the mission puzzle," said Master Sgt. Ernest Justvig, 79th AMU production superintendent. "Only after the pieces are put together can missions be successful and lives be saved."

When D-M receives the call to support a rescue mission, everyone knows what needs to be done. Aircraft maintainers work tirelessly through unpredictable conditions putting their blood and sweat into keeping the aircraft ready to fly, and everyone from logistics to support does their part to get the job done and the crew home safely.

"Although civil rescue is a secondary mission, we are ready when called upon," said Maj. Tim Allman, 79th RQS HC-130 aircraft commander.

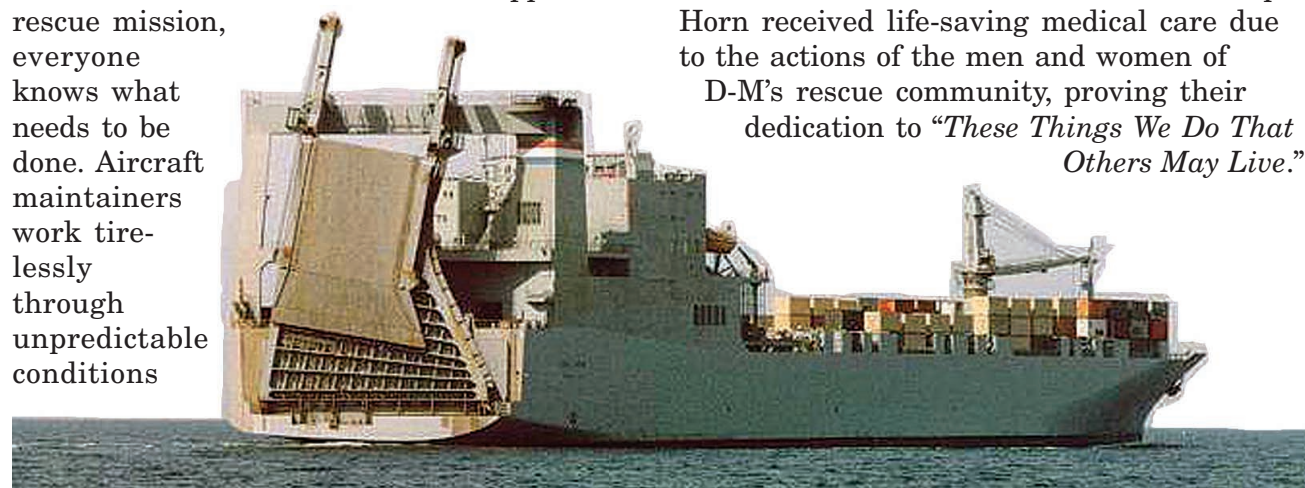

For D-M's new rescue units, this readiness has been nothing short of miraculous. Activated in March, the 79th RQS didn't receive its first HC-130 until May. Eventually, the unit expects to have up to 11 of the special aircraft, but for now, they are still operating with only one.

Another example of determination and dedication is the 48th RQS. The squadron has not yet been officially activated or received any of their own medical and rescue equipment. Showing teamwork and tenacity, this handful of Pararescuemen has already answered the call to save lives.

In the case of the merchant mariner, the Pararescuemen worked with other D-M units that supplied them with the equipment needed for a successful mission.

"We all know where we are supposed to be for the end product," Allman added. "We train, remain flexible and do what we can to reduce risks. We get the job done."

The merchant mariner from the MV Cape Horn received life-saving medical care due to the actions of the men and women of D-M's rescue community, proving their dedication to "These Things We Do That Others May Live."

Courtesy Military Sealift Command

The MV Cape Horn was more than 650 nautical miles west of San Francisco July 8 when one of her crew became ill and desperately needed medical care. D-M's rescue units answered the call for help and supported a life-saving rescue for the mariner. The MV Cape Horn is a 749-foot container ship and is one of 68 ships in the Military Sealift Command fleet. For more information on the Military Sealift Command, visit <http://www.msc.navy.mil/>.

Just another day of bowling turns momentous

By 2nd Lt. Beth Tucker
355th Wing Public Affairs

The bowling match started as a friendly competitive game between two high scoring players June 24. "I was only trying to shoot for my average," said Gregory Coppage, an engine mechanic from 355th Component Maintenance Squadron. Bowling with Andy King, Davis-Monthan Air Force Base Bowling Center manager, who recently bowled a perfect game himself, Coppage was determined to beat him in one game during their match.

But Coppage accomplished much more than beating King in one game. He beat his own top score, bowling a perfect game for the first time. With consistent previous scores in the high 200s, Coppage didn't expect to accomplish this feat when he did. "That was a pretty easy going day for me," he said about bowling for enjoyment that day.

After two games of 186 and 202, the third game that day began with a surprise. "I started out the third game with a turkey (three strikes in a row) and didn't think anything of it," Coppage said. "As the game progressed, my palms got sweaty. I looked up at the overhead monitor and saw seven in a row. The eighth and ninth frames were pretty shaky and a crowd began to gather behind me.

"At the start of the tenth frame, I just told myself 'You're still in the first frame.' I bowled two strikes in the tenth and was working on the last and final strike. Standing at the ball return, all I could hear was a lot of silence. I bowled the last ball and everyone cheered."

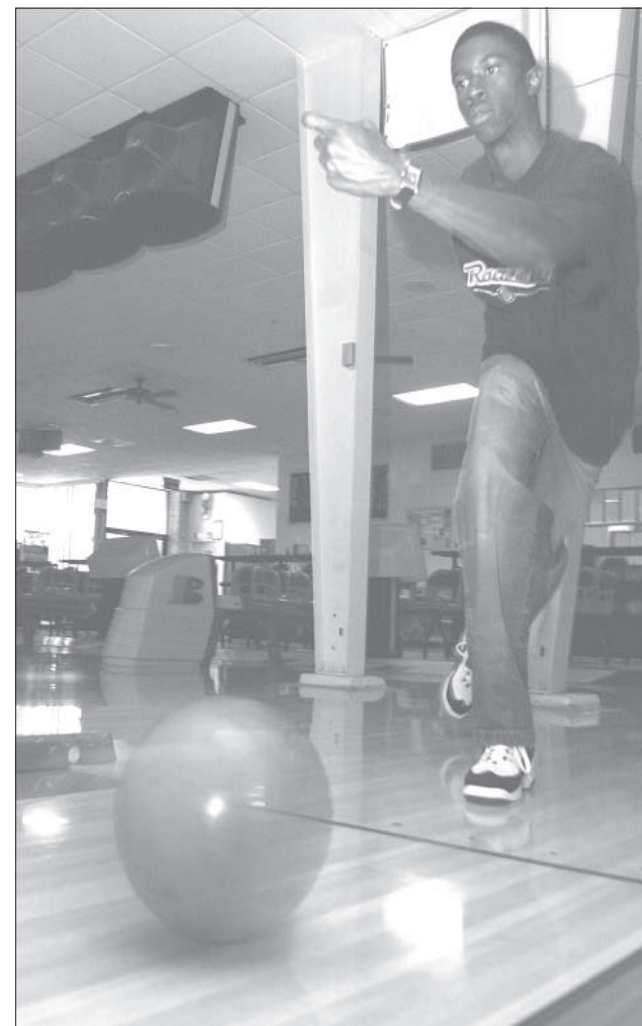

"When he got to his tenth strike, I thought he would be too nervous. I was wrong. The next three strikes were perfect," said King.

Bowling since the age of three with his mother, Coppage competes in an official league, but continues bowling for enjoyment.

"Whatever sport you are playing, you should always have some fun," he said. At the age of 16, Coppage played on a five-man team in Darmstadt, Germany and received the most improved bowler award that year after bowling a 283 mid-season.

"I really thought it was just another day of bowling at Davis-Monthan," Coppage said.

(Right) Gregory Coppage shows the form that earned him a perfect game at D-M Lanes. Coppage's 300 was the third bowled this year at the base's bowling center.

Club Fun Fridays

Club members and their guests have lots of great reasons to visit their clubs Fridays this summer. Every Friday the clubs hold their new "Summer Friday Buck Night" where members can enjoy burgers, hot dogs, 16 ounce domestic draft beers or 16 ounce sodas for just $1 each. Non-members pay only $2. Also, every Friday, members who buy anything at the club can register to win $50 in club cash coupons.

Members simply print their name and phone number on their sales receipt, then leave receipt in the Club Cash drawing box near the cashier. Drawings are held every Friday at 6:45 p.m. and on the last Friday of each month, $100 in club cash coupons will be given away. Members don't have to be present to win but those not present when their name is drawn receive half the normal drawing amount.
